Midsummer music in the grass— The cricket and the grasshopper; White daisies and red clover pass; White dasses and red clover pass,
The caterpillar trails her fur
After the languid butterfly;
But green and spring-like is the sod
Where Autumn's earliest lamps I spy— The taper of the golden rod.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

This flower is fuller of the sun
Than any our pale North can show;
It has the heart of August won,
And scatters wide the warmth and glow
Kindled at Summer's mid-noon blaze,
Where gentians of September bloom
Along October's leaf-strewn ways,
And through November's paths of gloom As lavish of its golden light

As sunshine's self this blossom is: Its starry chandeliers burn bright All day; and have you noted this— A perfect sun in every flower?
Ten thousand thousand fairy suns,
Raying from new disks hour by hour,
As up the stalk the life-flash runs? "A worthless plant-a flaunting weed!

Abundant splendors are too cheap." Neighbor, not so! unless, indeed, You would from Heaven the sun sweep,
And count as mean the common day:
Meseems the world has not so much

Superfluous beauty that we may Blight any thing with scornful touch. In times long past, the harebell's graco
I blent with this resplendent spray;
And one I loved would lean her face
Toward their contrasted hues, and say: Toward their contrasted intes, and say:
"The sun-like gold, the heavenly blue,
I know not which delights me most."
Sacred are both, dear heart, to you:
They lit your feet from earth's dim coast.

The swingour feet from earth s dim cost
The swinging harebell faintly tolled
Upon the still, autumnal air;
The golden-rod bent down to hold
Her rows of funeral-torches there.
All blossoms, sweet! to you were dear—
No homliest weed you counted vile,
The flower I choose, of all the year,
Is this, that last beheld your smile.

Herald of Autumn's reign, it sets Gay bonfires blazing round the fields: Rich autumn pays in gold his debts. For tenancy that Summer yields. Beauty's slow harvest now comes in; New promise with fulfilment won: The heart's vast hope does but begin, Filled with ripe seeds of sweetness gone.

Became its myriad glimmering planes
Like a great army's stir and wave;
Because its gold in billows blooms,
The poor man's barren walks to lave; Because its sun-shaped blossoms show How souls receive the light of God, And unto earth give back that glow-I love, I love the golden-rod.

> Aboriginal Tribes in Iudia. BY REV. J. TALBOT GRACEY.

When the Hindoos (Aryans) entered Hindostan from the high plains of Iran, they found the country already occupied by a people, some of whom became incorporated with the Hindoos, while others of them, remaining seperate, have constituted the Pariahs or outcasts of India. Some of the aboriginal tribes were never subjuga-ted, but retired to the more inaccessible regions, where they continue, distinct and apart, to this day. They are to be found now in the lower ranges of the Himalaya Mountains, and on the table-land on the west and northwest of Calcutta, and in the southern extremity of the Peninsula, near Cape Comorin.

We have no space to consider their ethnological relations, proposing only a word about their customs and creeds and mission work in their midst. Of those in the Him-CARBOLIC TABLETS.

The highest bhoot, or spirit, is a mediator between themselves and the creative deity. There are other derties whom they worship in times of distress, for each of whom a stone is stuck up on a small mound outside the village. They perform no worship without a sacrifice, though sacrifices vary for marriage, death, and various sorts of calamities. The stones are first marked with red paint, when the heads of six fowls are cut off with a battle axe, and the blood allowed to drip on six stones, after which the head is caten by the priest, and the body by others. They also sacrifice pigs and goats to departed ancestors.—From a work on Sonthalia and the Sonthalia, we learn much that seems reliable about these people.

The English Church Missionary Society commenced operations among them in 1860, and much has been done by the American missionaries, Bachelor and Phillips, the latter being the author of a Sonthal grammar. Hindoo and Bengalee schools have been established among them, and the Gauges Railroad runs through the territory occupied by them. In 1865, there were only three Sonthals who had become Christians; the number has increased now to perhaps five hundred.

These Sonthals are of the family of Coles, one of the most numerous divisions of these aberiginal races. From Dr. Anderson's recent book on missions, we learn that the Germans commenced mission work among the Coles in 1845. Their first convert was not made till after five years, but at latest dates the number of converts was fifteen hundred, and that of nominal Christians much larger. The native converts have been mere efficient than the missionaries in spreading Christianity.

The Shanars are a tribe of devil-worshippers, found about 150 to 200 miles from Cape Comorin, among whom, according to Dr. Anderson there are now some five hundred native preachers, and 100,000 nominal Christians, who contributed in 1863 $20,000 in gold for religious purposes. The work among these has often been attended with the same physical phenomena spoken of in connection with early revivals in Kentucky and elsewhere in this country—the whiphand elsewhere in this country in the sheet and commenced reading. Near the summit are the remains of an ancient fort built by the Indians. It formerly extended around the entire summit and defended every point, the only entrance being through a natural passage under a large rock, where only one could enter at a time. The whole length of this fortification was about one mile. It was about six feet high and constructed of granite.

On the north side, at a point where the walls are perpendicular, is a singular cave, which, though an object of great interest, has only been entered twice. The only western shores of Sitka Island, is but a drift. The tremendous bulk of Equatorial water rushes on in a changeless course. It is moving in obedience to a steady and almighty hand. Every drop feels the impulse of a force it cannot resist. Every drop is lighter than the drop of polar water, with which it is hastening to example the state of the state o change places, lest the equilibrium of nature

But on its way it receives, every moment an impact from the earth's rotation. And thus it moves on the line of a great circle which, though an object of great interest, has only been entered twice. The only practicable way of entering it is to swing down four hundred and fifty feet, the cave being situated nearly half way from base to summit. It is a circular hole, formed with as much accuracy as though it had been cut out by the chisel of an experienced workman. It penetrates a distance of a few feet, when it becomes too small for a person to advance father. Beyond that point it widens out and shows every evidence of being the opening of a great circle way is strewed with the marks of its thermal and climatic power. If the Gulf stream has clothed Ireland with its robo of verdure, and made it the "Emerald Isle," the Kuro Siwo has done as much for than those of any other man in the shop," said Lee, encouraged to go on.
